

Resources related to Invasion Literature

The website includes a comprehensive list of resources for researchers of Invasion Literature. This includes books, articles and websites.

There are more resources available than initially apparent. When I started researching this subject I started from The Riddle of the Sands and from the Wikipedia entry discovered the world of Invasion Literature.

Searching on this term had limited success but once I started following up links, and especially after discovering I.F. Clarke's books, I was able to expand upon the resources. JSTOR searches for articles were initially unfruitful as there is no single accepted term for the genre. Searching by book names - especially 'The Battle of Dorking' - and individual authors - e.g. 'Le Queux' - yielded more results from which references could then be followed. Details of the major book, articles, websites etc are discussed on the Study Resources page. See Scope of the Site for further details of the scope of this website.